

Uncoordinated roommates make the living environment bad.

Roommates can make or break the experience you have somewhere, so if there were to be an app that helps manage roommate duties and conversation, then it could lead to a healthier environment. The app would consist of two parts: an anonymous conversation and a tasks section. The chat would serve to communicate freely and have those who fear confrontation feel more able to communicate with their roommates. To make sure this isn't used to a bad extent, there will be a system that, if a user wants to figure out who said what, then it can be flagged, and if at least half of the roommates vote so, the anonymous name will be revealed. As for the tasks section, users can add tasks that will rotate between all the roommate members added to the list. If a task needs to be done, such as the trash, then it can only be flagged once by any of the roommates, and the app will send a notification at a minimum of 1 designated time by the user. This task, along with another accumulated task, will be in their personal task list and will be reminded every day until they clear it. Then, it will go to the next person and so on.